

Nonfiction Signposts

When reading nonfiction, pay attention to how ideas develop and connect.

STOP when an argument is made.

Ask: What is the author's main point?

STOP when supporting details, tables, figures, or charts appear.

Ask: What evidence supports this claim? Is it credible?

STOP when the text explains its reasoning.

Ask: How does the author connect ideas? What methods do they use?

Nonfiction Signposts

When reading nonfiction, pay attention to how ideas develop and connect.

STOP when an argument is made.

Ask: What is the author's main point?

STOP when supporting details, tables, figures, or charts appear.

Ask: What evidence supports this claim? Is it credible?

STOP when the text explains its reasoning.

Ask: How does the author connect ideas? What methods do they use?

Nonfiction Signposts

When reading nonfiction, pay attention to how ideas develop and connect.

STOP when an argument is made.

Ask: What is the author's main point?

STOP when supporting details, tables, figures, or charts appear.

Ask: What evidence supports this claim? Is it credible?

STOP when the text explains its reasoning.

Ask: How does the author connect ideas? What methods do they use?

Nonfiction Signposts

When reading nonfiction, pay attention to how ideas develop and connect.

STOP when an argument is made.

Ask: What is the author's main point?

STOP when supporting details, tables, figures, or charts appear.

Ask: What evidence supports this claim? Is it credible?

STOP when the text explains its reasoning.

Ask: How does the author connect ideas? What methods do they use?

Nonfiction Signposts

When reading nonfiction, pay attention to how ideas develop and connect.

STOP when an argument is made.

Ask: What is the author's main point?

STOP when supporting details, tables, figures, or charts appear.

Ask: What evidence supports this claim? Is it credible?

STOP when the text explains its reasoning.

Ask: How does the author connect ideas? What methods do they use?

