

Social Science Signposts

When analyzing historical and contemporary texts, consider arguments and perspectives.

STOP when an argument is made.

Ask: What is the author's main point?

STOP when supporting details appear.

Ask: What evidence supports this claim? Is it credible?

STOP when the text explains its reasoning.

Ask: How does the author connect ideas? What methods do they use?

Social Science Signposts

When analyzing historical and contemporary texts, consider arguments and perspectives.

STOP when an argument is made.

Ask: What is the author's main point?

STOP when supporting details appear.

Ask: What evidence supports this claim? Is it credible?

STOP when the text explains its reasoning.

Ask: How does the author connect ideas? What methods do they use?

Social Science Signposts

When analyzing historical and contemporary texts, consider arguments and perspectives.

STOP when an argument is made.

Ask: What is the author's main point?

STOP when supporting details appear.

Ask: What evidence supports this claim? Is it credible?

STOP when the text explains its reasoning.

Ask: How does the author connect ideas? What methods do they use?

Social Science Signposts

When analyzing historical and contemporary texts, consider arguments and perspectives.

STOP when an argument is made.

Ask: What is the author's main point?

STOP when supporting details appear.

Ask: What evidence supports this claim? Is it credible?

STOP when the text explains its reasoning.

Ask: How does the author connect ideas? What methods do they use?

Social Science Signposts

When analyzing historical and contemporary texts, consider arguments and perspectives.

STOP when an argument is made.

Ask: What is the author's main point?

STOP when supporting details appear.

Ask: What evidence supports this claim? Is it credible?

STOP when the text explains its reasoning.

Ask: How does the author connect ideas? What methods do they use?